

"Just be yourself" never really helped, did it? Here's the thing: that awkward feeling isn't a flaw – and it isn't broadcasting to the whole room the way it feels like it is. You can't delete it. But you can train what you do when it shows up.

This is a social anxiety workbook for teens who can't stand workbooks. No lectures, no therapy-speak – just a coach in your corner and small steps you can actually try.

Inside, you'll learn to:

- Quiet the "spotlight" feeling that everyone's watching and judging
- Drop the habits – over-rehearsing, going quiet, hiding – that secretly make it worse
- Walk into a conversation, or a group, without scripting every word first
- Say no, and say your part, even when it feels like everyone's looking

Built on real psychology, written in plain language a teenager will actually read.

The awkward isn't the problem. Not knowing what to do when it shows up is.

Daniel Vega

YOUR AWKWARD ISN'T SHOWING

A Social Anxiety
Workbook for Teens
Who Hate Workbooks

Daniel Vega